

29 Nov

The BPC wanted to set out on a day carousing the town but got interrupted by Quarth noticing a mook staking out the library. After a short chase through the streets of the Elven District they apprehended the person and dragged him into the library for questioning. With the help of the vines they soon learned the artificers guild who wanted to buy the research and the vines inside were now looking for more clandestine ways of getting what they wanted. The party hatched a plan where they let the mook send the all clear with his sending stone and then layed a trap for whoever was coming. No one came, except for the Justicars investigating a report of a guy getting chased and kidnapped. After some Smerrel shennanigans and some bluffing from Quarth, they were satisfied in their investigation.

Later that night
